A child's drawing in black ink on a light background. The central focus is a Christmas tree with a thick trunk and several branches. A large, dark, oval shape is drawn on the trunk, resembling a wreath or a decorative element. To the left of the tree, there are two long, thin, curved shapes that look like branches or perhaps a reindeer's antlers. At the bottom left, there is a small drawing of a reindeer's head with a large nose. The drawing is simple and expressive, typical of a young child's artwork.

The image is a vertical artwork with a monochromatic purple color palette. It features a central, textured vertical trunk that resembles a tree or a stylized column. From this trunk, several spiral-shaped branches emerge, each forming a distinct, rounded spiral. The background is a textured, mottled purple, suggesting a canvas or paper with visible brushstrokes or fibers. The overall composition is balanced and rhythmic due to the repeating spiral forms.
